Sheets are obtained with an electro coloration process (I.N.C.O.)

The formation of different colors is created by "interference", actually exploiting the phase difference between the light rays reflected by the several surfaces of oxides (created during the treatment) and the light rays before refracted (by the same oxides) and then reflected again by the surface of the underlying metal.

The peculiarity of the coloration by interference consists then in the modification of the superficial aspect of stainless steel without using any varnishes or coatings and that shows unquestionable benefits such as resistance to corrosion.
